

BRINGING NEW TEAM MEMBERS INTO YOUR TEAM

What is team member socialization?

Socialization is the process by which new team members become part of the team—i.e., the process by which *outsiders become insiders*¹. Socialization is a continuous process that involves both the team and the newcomer.

Why is it important?

Research shows that understanding the newcomer and team role in the socialization process while investing in the process leads to more committed and satisfied members, higher job performance, and cost savings based on lower turnover rates.

How to ACE Team Member Socialization

Acceptance: fostering connections & developing the quality of relationships with existing team members and other organizational stakeholders while helping the newcomers feel liked, accepted, and trusted.

Quickly label and refer to newcomers as team members Introduce newcomers to other team members either through email or face-to-face
Tell the team about newcomer's competence and potential to boost expectations
Have new members introduce themselves during the first team meeting Assign a mentor from within the team and/or organization to every new member Establish contact between newcomers and different departments/hierarchies within the organization
Foster mutual trust between new members and the team
Encourage newcomers to bring their authentic selves to the team Check in with other members about their perceptions of newcomer adjustment

Clarity: reducing ambiguity by enhancing understanding of team/organizational norms and what is needed for the newcomer's role and tasks.

		Review the team charter with the newcomer to enhance understanding of how the team operates, including roles and responsibilities, norms, and operating procedures
		Explain communication methods and response norms
		Outline work scope, objectives and key responsibilities of team $&$ newcomer
		Set expectations around work schedule
		Give direction and advice around how to spend first week
		Provide feedback frequently Empo	wei	ment: providing newcomers with training and support to be able to perform in their role and increase motivation by boosting confidence, building self-
•		providing organizational/supervisor support.
		Train on tools and software necessary for position
